It was that that sustained him and a friend once they answered God's call to evangelize on Belfast's dangerous streets. The ministry became full-time, and they now have a home where they counsel and minister. Their non-denominational, charitable Christian group is known as Agape Fellowship. They have seen and have in the Fellowship many who have bridged the volatile hate once dividing Catholic and Protestant, police and former terrorists.

Bridging yet many strong feelings, they are bringing Christ's hope to hurting people confused by error.
